

Virtual Chief Security Information Officer

Our Virtual Chief Information Security Officers (vCISOs) provide your organisation with all the benefits of having a full-time CISO. They have experience of briefing boards, leading cyber security change, and developing the full breadth of cyber security capabilities every organisation needs. Thomas Murray's experts are pragmatic, systematic and risk informed. They work to rapidly reduce your cyber security risk and will help you to develop sustainable capabilities.

How we can help

We can enhance your existing cyber security efforts and can work with your stakeholders to provide leadership and targeted support. Challenges we can help you address include:

Lack of cyber security resources

- Provision of cyber security leadership
- Eliminate need for lengthy recruitment processes

Need for urgent improvements

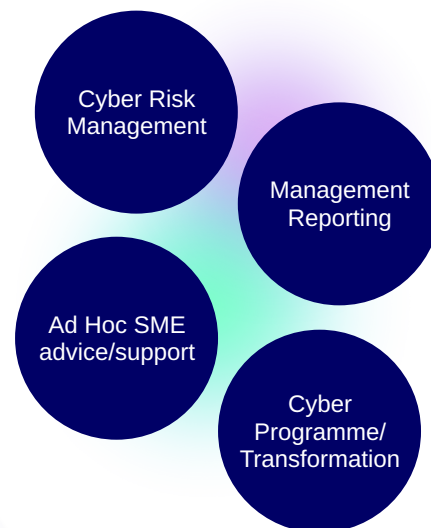

- Post-breach remediation activities
- Audit to identify areas for improvement
- Meeting external assurance framework requirements

Concerns around an existing function

- Address underperforming cyber security function
- Alignment of cyber security activities and business strategy

Board-level engagement

- Effective board-level communications
- Provision of trusted, independent advice

— Delivering change

Through a single point of contact, a vCISO arrangement gives you access to a team of cyber security experts who will draw on decades of experience. They understand the complexities, nuances and specific challenges facing your organisation. We add value in all areas of cyber security by focusing on education and skills development, in addition to rapid and measurable improvements.

— A proven approach based on success

We have core beliefs that form the basis for all our work with clients. We put cyber security risk into a context that is understood by both executives and technical staff.
